✓ WINE, WOMEN AND SONG. ✓

In the course of one whole day, this story implies that this masculine cat has experience with all three elements mentioned above.

He starts out early in the day by going fishing with Izzie Mouse, then later they try a round of golf.

Then along toward evening, he decides to call on Farmer Al's Feminine Feline, Fanny Cat. He serenades her with a bango. The music wakes Al up and he goes out and throws the moon at him. However the music goes charm little Fanny, and she falls right out of her balcony for him, it crashes his new bango, and makes him sore, so he "smacks" her over the head with it and leaves her flat.

This self same cat decides to try his hand at catching mice, so he rigs up a catapult with cheese bait, then he climbs up on a building and drops a rock down to throw the mice into the air, and he catches them in his derby hat and locks them in a little box. This stunt works fine until he neglects to close the box tight, and one mouse climbs out and kicks him right off the roof.

The cat singles out this one particular mouse and a chase starts. At the edge of a rough, ragged cliff, this mouse tricks the cat by hiding under a large rock, and causes the rock to slide off carrying the cat with it. This large pointed rock falls rapidly for about "Octsteen" miles and crashes right through the ground. On and on it goes, coming through in China, with our friend the cat much disturbed. A Chinese orchestra is playing, "Getting Gertie's Garter" at the "finale".

Aesop Says: "A rolling stone gathers no moss, but it gets a great polish."
